Areas of present activities are the organization of the international congress on the Zoogeography and Ecology of Greece and the adjacent regions every three years, the publication of the series Fauna Graeciae, the publication of the journal Hellenic Zoological Archives, the publication of the Red Data Book of the Threatened Vertebrates of Greece, the supervision of the Greek Fauna Documentation Center that collects and processes data on the fauna of Greece, the implementation of research projects and the collaboration with Universities and other scientific and environmental organizations for the promotion of subjects dealing with research, information, conservation and education on the animals of Greece.

ANNOTATED LIST OF THE ANTS (HYMENOPTERA, FORMICIDAE) OF GREECE

By A. LEGAKIS

Zoological Museum, Univ. of Athens, Panepistimioupolis, 157 84 Athens

Introduction

The Formicidae is among the groups that have been insufficiently studied in Greece although they are one of the most abundant arthropod taxa that live on and in the soil. Their social structure makes them very attractive for ecological and behavioural studies, the kind of research that has not yet flourished in Greece, while their more or less uniform appearance and the taxonomic problems they present, especially in the islands, are repellent for aspiring entomologists.

The first records of ants from Greece came from the French scientific expedition of the Peloponnese, more than 150 years ago (BRULLÉ 1833), followed by the results of the study of the collections made by E. von Oertzen and H. von Kiesenwetter in various parts of present-day Greece (ROGER 1859, ANDRÉ 1882, 1883). During the second half of last century, the curators of the first Natural History Museum of Greece, T. Heldreich and T. Krüper, contributed material to various entomologists in Europe while the eminent myrmecologists C. Emery and A. Forel started their long list of articles that increased significantly the list of the ants of Greece.

During the first half of the 20th century, the Italians C. Menozzi and B. Finzi and the french F. Santschi studied material mainly from northern Greece and the islands and described many new species and subspecies.

The second half of the 20th century has been very poor in myrmecological research in Greece. Only in recent years have there appeared some interesting articles by D. Agosti, A. Buschinger, C. Collingwood, R. Harkness and the author.

The taxa that have been reported so far show that Greece has a significant ant fauna compared with neighbouring countries. If we take into account the fact that the whole country has not been studied thoroughly (see map), we can expect new records and possibly new taxa in the future.

The ant fauna of Greece seems to have a predominant mediterranean distribution. Central European elements reach northern Greece and some come as far south as central Greece. The ant fauna of the eastern Aegean islands is very similar to that of Asia Minor while the ants of western Greece and the Ionian islands have close affinities with Dalmatian and Italian taxa. Endemism is high, especially in Crete and the Cyclades islands but the situation cannot be considered as final unless the taxonomic problems presented below are clarified.

The fragmentation of the Greek area in many islands, the close affinities with the european, the asian and sometimes the african ant fauna and several other factors have led to the appearance of many different forms of ants. Some of them may be simple ecological adaptations, others may be subspecies and others species. Up to now, there has been no thorough revision of all the ants of Greece. The most recent by Agosti and Collingwood does not include southern Greece and the islands that are the most problematic areas. Almost all the records so far have come from isolated material collected sometimes by persons other than the authors and, especially in the case of the identifications of the previous century, never verified. A lot of the older material has been lost and even the authors themselves have revised their identifications in subsequent publications. In view of these problems, during the course of this work it was decided to abandon the traditional nomenclature and to give only the name of the taxon without assigning it to any category. It is left to a future revision to clarify the status of these taxa. However, at the end of the species list, an attempt is made to produce a definite and critical list that is in accordance with the latest taxonomic literature. This list includes 256 species (1 Dorylinae, 1 Leptanillinae, 7 Ponerinae, 2 Proceratiinae, 138 Myrmicinae, 13 Dolichoderinae, and 94 Formicinae). The most speciose genera are Myrmica (13 spp.), Aphaenogaster (19 spp.), Messor (16 spp.), Temnothorax (19 spp.), Tetramorium (18 spp.), Lasius (22 spp.), Camponotus (31 spp.) and Formica (13 spp.). The list includes 23 species new for Greece and 1 subspecies. Three further lists are presented, first a list of unavailable names, second, a list of junior synonyms and third, a list of typical localities for taxa that have been described from Greece. A few taxonomic and nomenclatorial notes are appended at the end.

The following list includes the name of the taxon, the name or names under which it has appeared in the greek ant literature, the first bibliographic reference where this name has appeared in capitals, the region from which it has been recorded and some notes. References that are not considered as valid publications under the International Code of Zoological Nomenclature are marked with an asterisk (*). Valid names of species are in bold italics, valid names of subspecies are in regular italics, junior synonyms are in regular bold non-italics and unavailable names or incertae sedis are in underlined bold non-italics
